

Opposed to wind turbines

Dear Editor:

Greenbrier County is in the midst of turmoil over the proposed Beech Ridge wind turbine project. A large majority of people are opposed to it, others are just comfortably numb, others are undecided, and others are for it—this is the arena for any debate.

There is a fast and large growing opposition to the corporate takeover of our wilderness areas for their own profit—Greenbrier County is for sale, make no mistake. There are more and more Realtors, more and more contractors, more people migrating to a pristine mountain community unadulterated by unsightly corporate land holdings.

We sincerely hope our county commissioners will take the time to listen to their constituents, the people who voted them into office (one of whom we elected because of his stand on interstate bypasses defacing farmland properties). We just hope the commissioners remain consistent in the fight for preservation of the sanctity of farmland and wilderness, and not be distracted and wooed by the waving of dollars under their noses.
